Zachary A. R. Phillips is a young Attorney-at-Law, born in Antigua and Barbuda and baptized in the Caribbean Sea. Zachary started his academic career at the University of the West Indies, Cave Hill Campus. There he received a BSc. in Political Science and Law and an LLB both with First Class Honours. Immediately after he pursued an LL.M in Public International Law with distinction from the Queen Mary University of London. Notably, he was awarded the Programme Prize for receiving the highest results in Public International Law for that academic year. Zachary was called to the bar in 2020 and is currently employed at the Attorney General's Chambers of Antigua and Barbuda, as a Crown Counsel. Due to the heavy interdependence of the Eastern Caribbean islands his daily tasks include cooperation and coordination with counterparts from other Caribbean jurisdictions. He was also awarded the opportunity to intern at the Eastern Caribbean Court of Appeal and learn first-hand how justice is dispensed within the sub region. Zachary's main areas of interest are international law and regional integration law. His academic writings have been published in the International Community Law Review, and the Review of European, Comparative & International Environmental Law.
